What's The Show?

The Internet is about to meet its worst enemy: An 83-year-old Grandma.

It's one of those oh-so-common tales in today's world: An elderly Grandma receives an e-mail from a supposed Nigerian prince. After dutifully handing over her entire life savings, the "prince" responds... by bestowing upon her magical powers to travel deep within the Internet!!

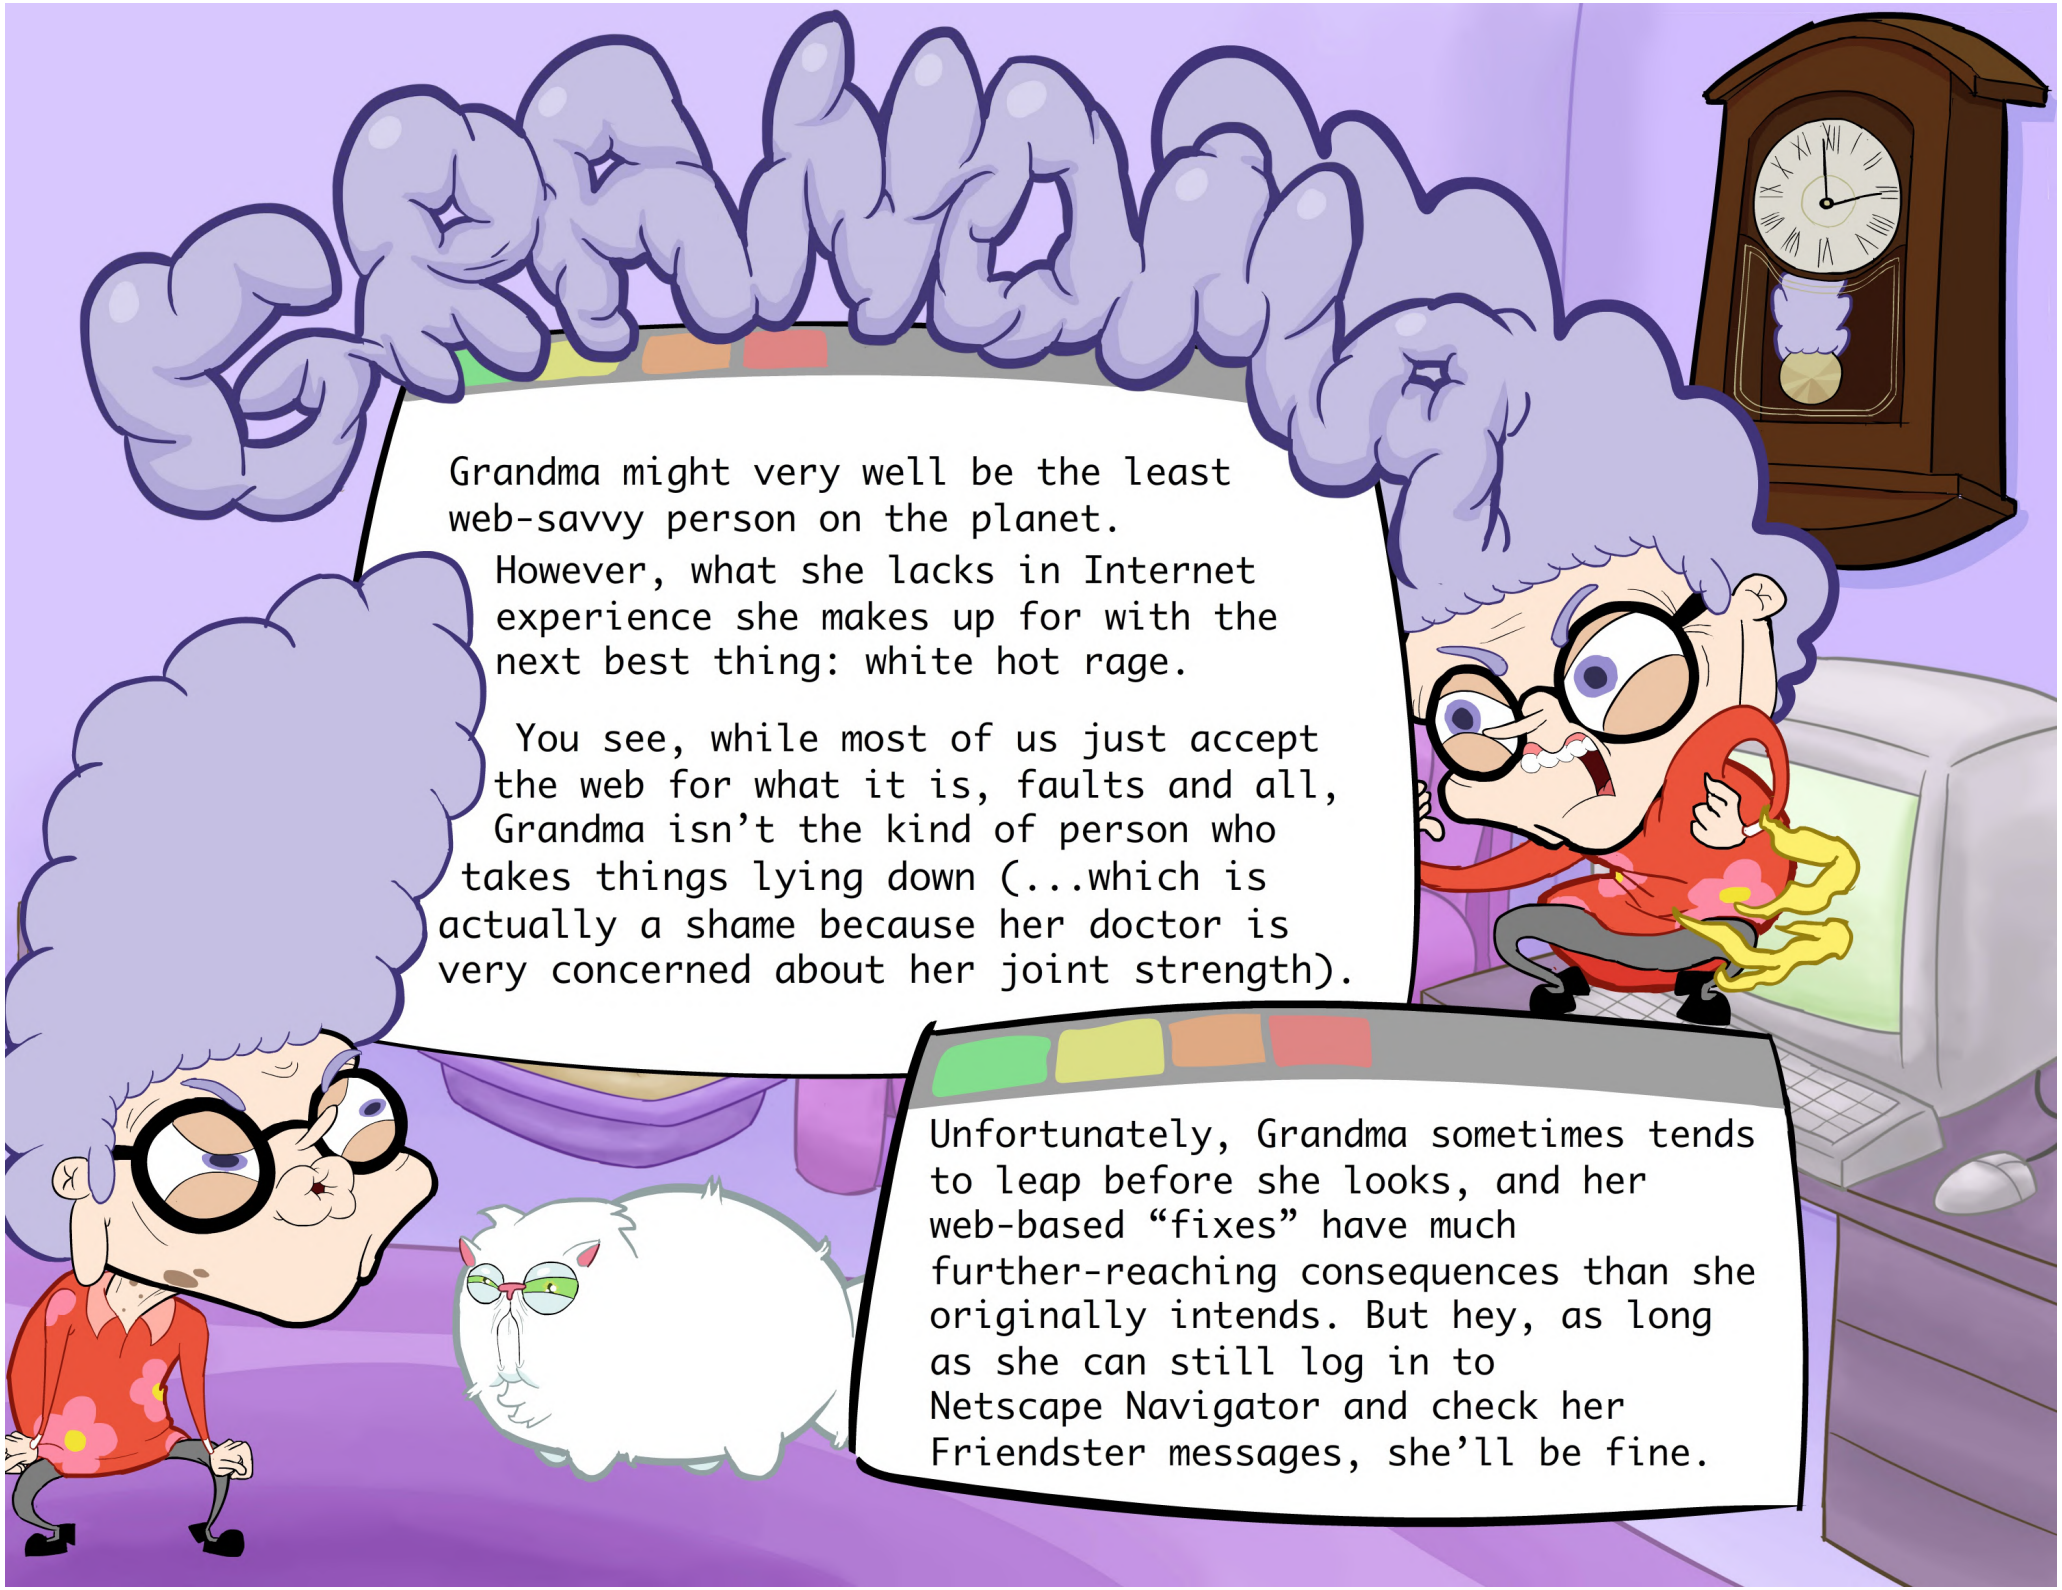

With her amazing new abilities, Grandma is now determined to fix all of the problems in today's digital world. Change won't come easily though, because underneath every website is a new environment with its own unique rulers and mythologies. And around every corner, Grandma will find herself in a series of hilarious odysseys battling mythical beasts, powerful wizards, and LOLcats gone wrong.

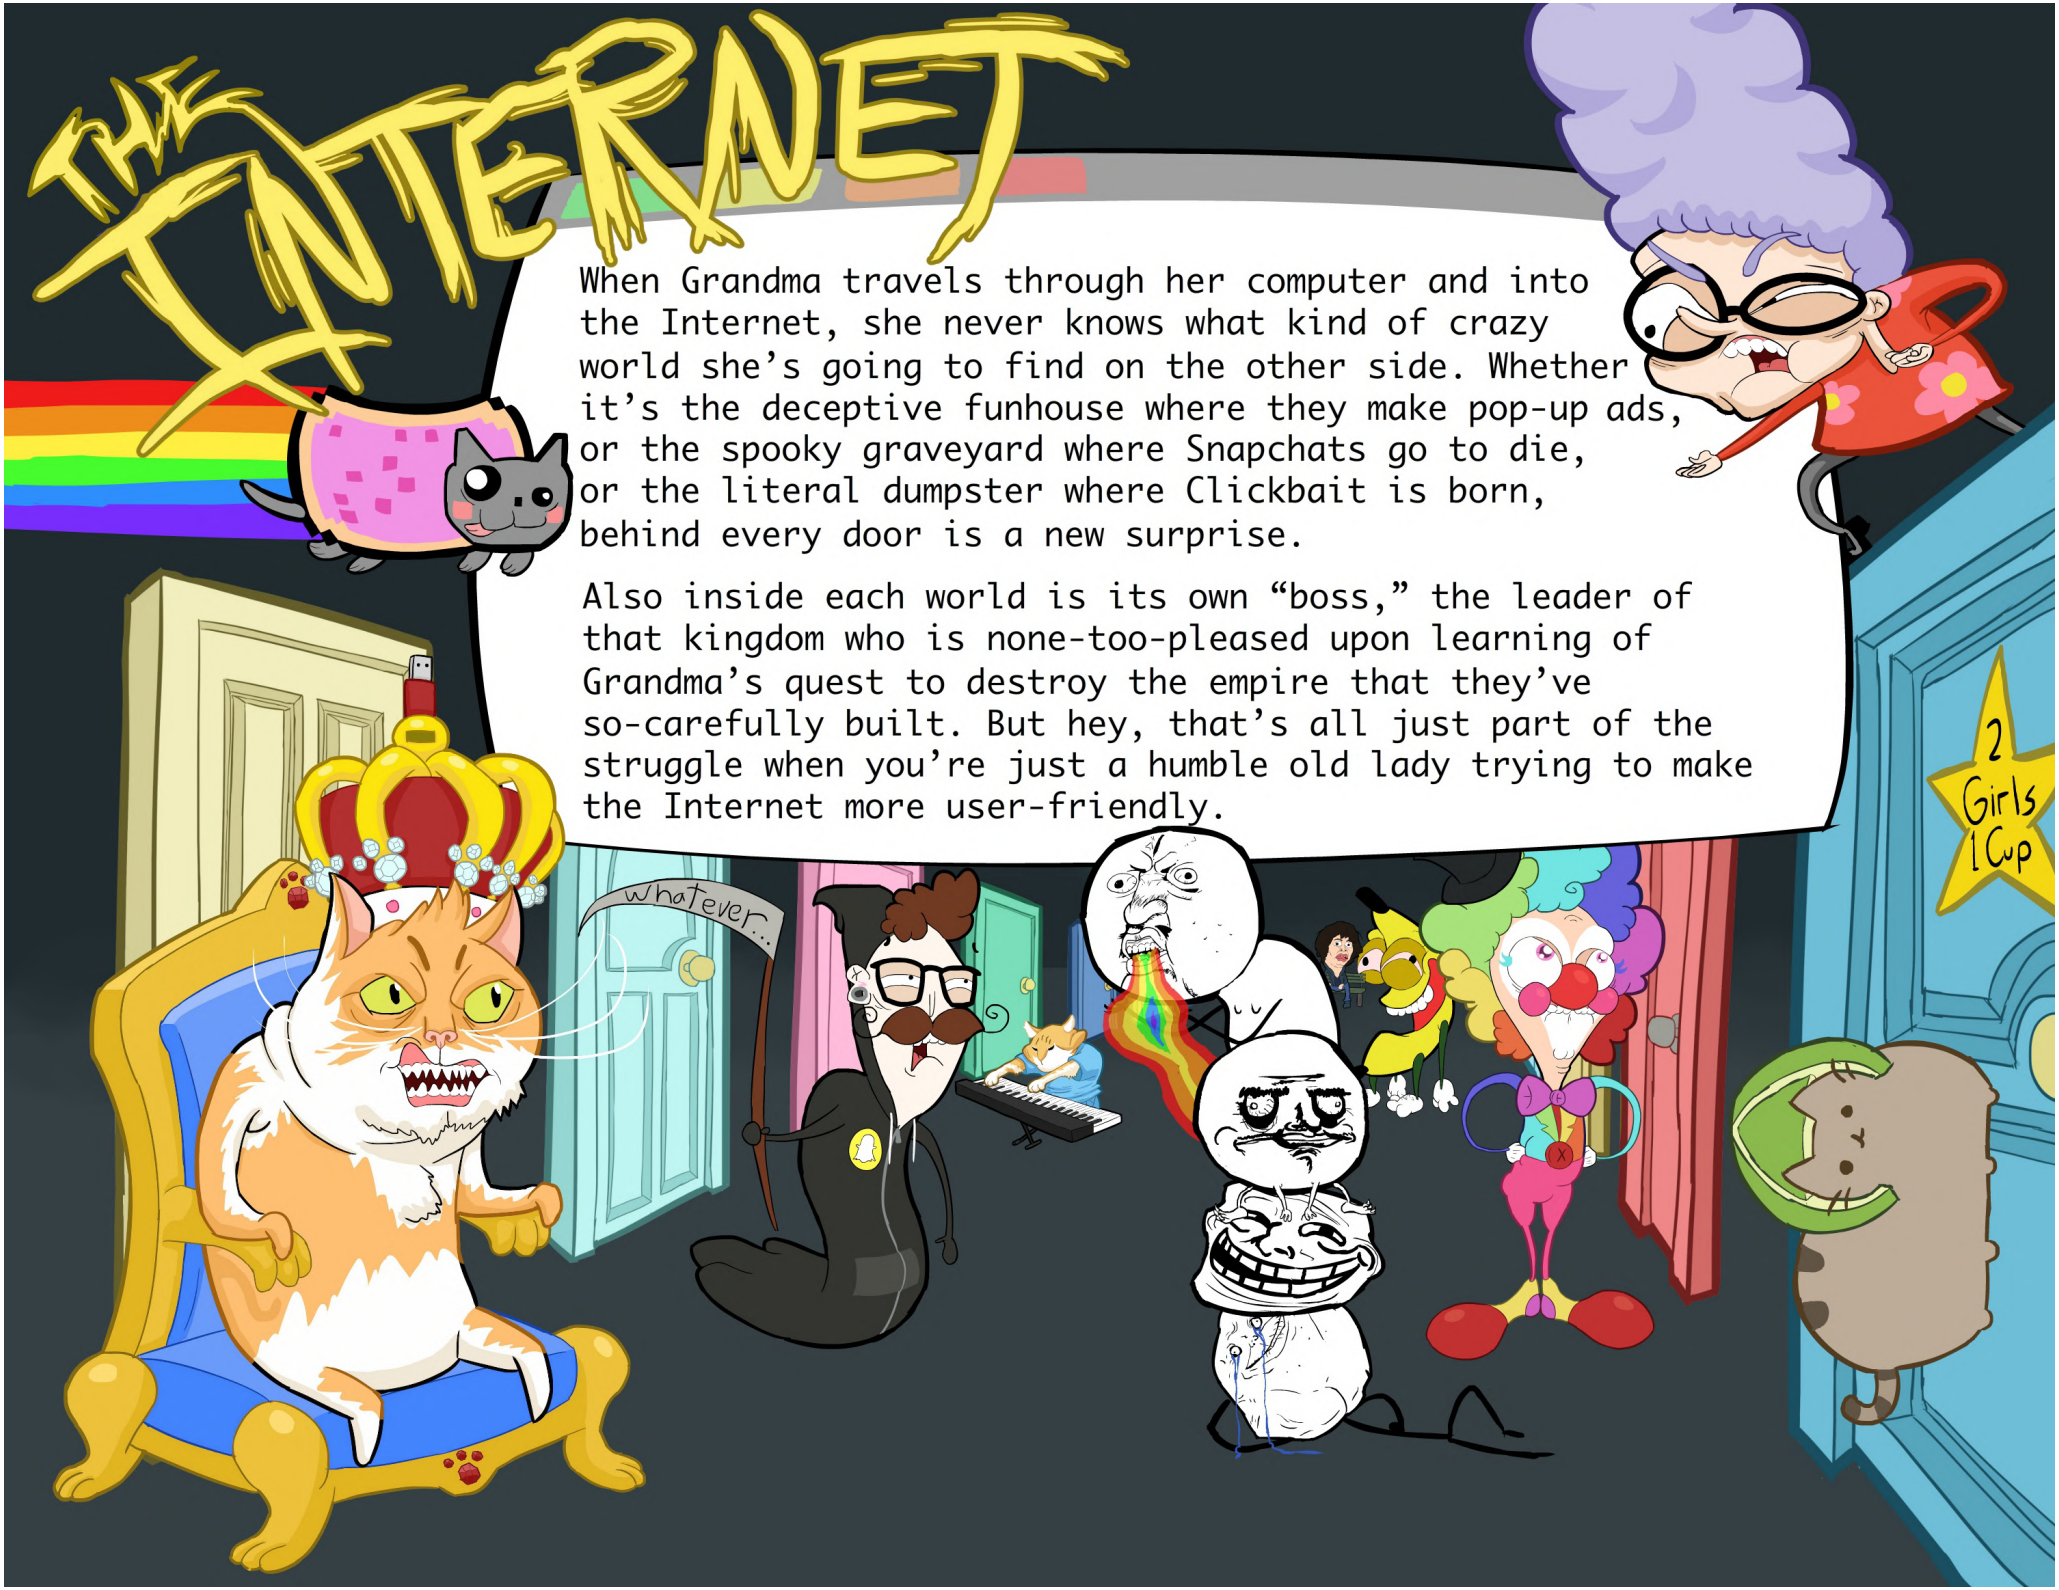

Though outmatched, Grandma always manages to alter the fabric of the Internet, one way or another. Then and only then is she is finally free to return home to type Google searches as her Facebook status while forwarding you chain e-mails.

GRANDMA
Grandma might very well be the least web-savvy person on the planet.
However, what she lacks in Internet experience she makes up for with the next best thing: white hot rage.
You see, while most of us just accept the web for what it is, faults and all, Grandma isn't the kind of person who takes things lying down (...which is actually a shame because her doctor is very concerned about her joint strength).
Unfortunately, Grandma sometimes tends to leap before she looks, and her web-based "fixes" have much further-reaching consequences than she originally intends. But hey, as long as she can still log in to Netscape Navigator and check her Friendster messages, she'll be fine.

THE INTERNET
When Grandma travels through her computer and into the Internet, she never knows what kind of crazy world she's going to find on the other side. Whether it's the deceptive funhouse where they make pop-up ads, or the spooky graveyard where Snapchats go to die, or the literal dumpster where Clickbait is born, behind every door is a new surprise.
Also inside each world is its own "boss," the leader of that kingdom who is none-too-pleased upon learning of Grandma's quest to destroy the empire that they've so-carefully built. But hey, that's all just part of the struggle when you're just a humble old lady trying to make the Internet more user-friendly.
whatever...

EPISODES

“Grandma Vs. Snapchat”

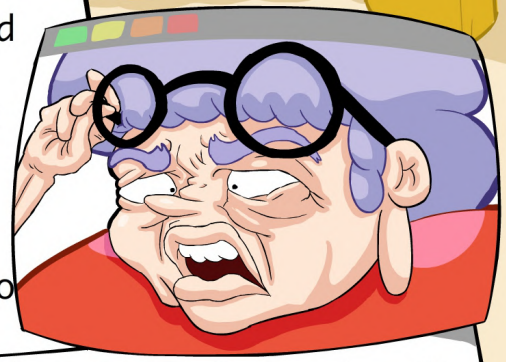

Grandma is incensed when she realizes that her granddaughter’s baby photos, like everything else on Snapchat, have been automatically deleted. If she ever wants to see that adorable pic again, she’s going to need to steal it from the dark ruler of the Snapchat underworld, The Grim Snapper.

“Grandma Vs. Pop-Up Ads”

When Grandma’s computer becomes over-run with pop-up ads, she ventures into the web to find their creator: a lonely, friendless clown living in a carnival funhouse. While at first Popsy the Clown appears nice enough (if a bit clingy), Grandma soon learns that he never intends to let her leave.

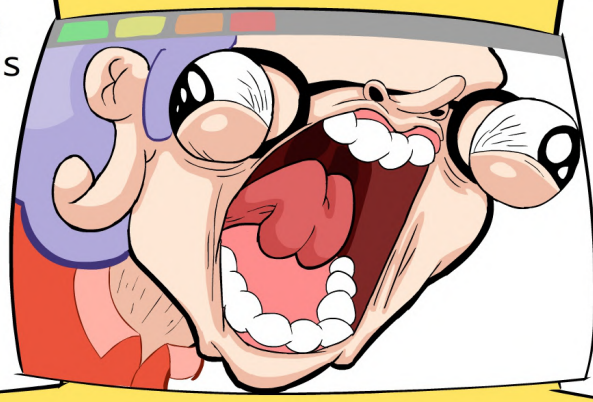

“Grandma Vs. Internet Trolls”

After Blake’s Facebook live stream gets ruthlessly trolled, Grandma decides to hunt down the bully and give him a taste of his own medicine. But when she finds this digital tough-guy living under a bridge in the Internet, Grandma discovers too late that every insult she hurls only makes him mo powerful.

“Grandma Vs. Clickbait”

Tired of web articles with headlines making promises the content doesn't deliver, Grandma decides to rid the web of clickbait. She travels to its source: a "SkuzzFeed" dumpster in the back alleys of the Internet. There, the world’s best Clickbaiter (“The Master Baiter”) leads a powerful network that has no intention of being shut down by an ornery old lady.

“Grandma Vs. Captchas”

While buying tickets online, Grandma is stalled by a confusing captcha (one of those weird distorted number puzzles websites use to determine if you’re a human). Frustrated, she goes to Captcha Land, a nebulous kingdom with a wicked queen who can conjure anything from random letters and numbers.
